Difference Between Crystal and Glass

Key difference: Glass is a generic name, while, crystal is a subcategory of glass, made in the same manner as glass but with different materials.

Hence, all crystal is glass, but not all glass is crystal.

Scientifically, crystals are pure substances whose atoms, molecules, or ions are arranged in an ordered pattern, where they extend in all three spatial dimensions. Crystals most commonly occur naturally on the earth, though the process of crystal formation via mechanisms of crystal growth is called crystallization or solidification.

While, referring in the same context as glass, crystal refers to well glass. The term crystal is often used to refer to glassware that has a more elegant form than the normal or everyday glassware. However, that is not the official difference between the two. Actually, there is no official clean cut definition of crystal.

Still, the general rule that applies is that crystal is a type of glass that contains lead.

There are three primary criteria for crystal as established by the European Union in 1969: a lead content in excess of 24%, a density in excess of 2.90 and a reflective index of 1.545. However, outside of the European Union, this definition is usually disregarded. In the United States, any glass with more than 1% of lead content is termed as crystal.

Technically, the application of the term 'crystal' to glass is in itself inaccurate, as glass is an amorphous solid. Hence, by definition it lacks a crystalline structure, which is necessary for a crystal. Still, the term, even though erroneously applied to glass, has stuck around and remains popular.

The color and brilliance of glass often varies, depending on its content. Glass made with iron tends to have a green tinge, while glass made with soda-lime will have an aqua tinge. While, some find these tinges to be unattractive, glasses with a greenish hue tend to be considerably stronger. Crystals generally are light in color and are mostly translucent. Some clear crystals have the properties of reflecting light into different colors.

When held in the right position, the refraction and dispersion of light from crystal will create a rainbow of hues.

So, in summation, glass is a generic name, while, crystal is a subcategory of glass, made in the same manner as glass but with different materials. Hence, all crystal is glass, but not all glass is crystal.
